To: The Young and the Restless
People of Africa

Majority if not all of the young people in Africa share a common denominator;
POVERTY.

To be young in Africa = to be Poor.

Many times the youth of Africa and the people of Africa in general are agitating for change on issues and problems that have no immediate solutions within their immediate institutions, administrations, or even borders.

The increase in college tuition fees in Kenyan tertiary learning institutions for example is not a problem that can be solved by college administrations.

In fact, it's not a problem that the government itself has an immediate solution for.

To the government, the increase in college tuition fees is actually its solution towards self sustainability for universities and colleges.

So what do we do where do we go if we cannot go to our immediate administrations or government with our problems?

We go to ourselves.

We think bigger.

African governments have many challenges to deal with. The present government of Kenya for example is dealing with repayment of massive foreign debt to prevent seizure of national assets by foreign creditors; which is just the same as re-colonization.

You can cry and demonstrate about rise in cost of living and college tuitions fees from here up to Timbuktu; there is nothing the government can do about that issue at the moment, except to deploy riot police in the event of demonstrations.

As the former American President JFK said – do not ask what the government can do for you; ask what you can do for your government and country.

And this is what 1AMov is all about.

The first thing we can do is to collaborate and create earning opportunities inside our borders but more importantly beyond our borders with other Africans.

1AMov is space for creative and progressive solutions for the greater good of the people of Africa working as One; with a sense of common purpose for shared prosperity; Hereby The 1A Project.

The people of Africa can partner across countries to do business in a bigger way, more effectively and more profitably. They can partner in various technological frontiers with powerful and uniquely African ideas.

For example; if you have writing skills and talents you could write interesting gripping and suspenseful - 'Pay to Read' Stories and Articles for readers in your country.

(For just KES 2.00 -5.00 per article (< 0.035 USD)

But you would do much better if you write articles for readers across Africa and the rest of the world.

Same goes for 'Pay to Watch' Video content and 'Pay to Download' Books & Art (PDF).

At KES 2 per Article or Video:

1,000 readers = KES 2,000 per day.

10,000 readers = KES 20,000 per day.

The rest would be about Quality and Creativity; Demand and Supply.

So instead of students agitating for lowering of college tuition, etc, they can forward practical progressive actionable solutions to their college administrations.

One place to start would be an Intra-African Universities Online Collaboration Program.

Student leaders can request their administrations to send formal invitations to other universities and colleges in Africa for online collaborations and partnerships on various online media and platforms (starting with 1AMov.com).

Here students could then exchange and explore progressive ideas, job opportunities and even enter into partnerships to do businesses at continental level.

This would also automatically mean that Student writers and video content creators on 1AMov obtain a wider readership and higher earnings just from among college students.

That is just one example that can make a huge difference and positive impact in the lives of many both in and out of college.

A Kenyan student can partner with a Nigerian student to supply original authentic Nigerian wear on credit under such a program to sell in Kenya; that's another example.

The point is that when think bigger there is a lot we can do for ourselves and for our country.

So instead of merely agitating and fighting those in power we first try to see where we can work with them.

Because there are things that administrations or governments can do better for us. An Intra-African Universities online collaboration program is one example.

And should they not be supportive, that does not prevent the people of Africa from getting started without them; they will catch up.

The power to determine our lives and destinies lies nowhere else but in our hands.
